Buildings and layout

■ 建筑物和布局

The site around Trafalgar Square has been a significant landmark since the 1200s. For centuries, distances measured from Charing Cross have served as location markers. The site of the present square formerly contained the elaborately designed, enclosed courtyard, King's Mews. After George IV moved the mews to Buckingham Palace, the area was redeveloped by John Nash, but progress was slow after his death, and the square did not open until 1844. The 169-foot Nelson's Column at its centre is guarded by four lion statues. A number of commemorative statues and sculptures occupy the square, but the Fourth Plinth, left empty since 1840, has been host to contemporary art since 1999. Prominent buildings facing the square include the National Gallery, St Martin-in-the-Fields, Canada House, and South Africa House.

En las cuatro esquinas de la plaza se sitúan cuatro plintos, los situados en la zona norte se instalaron para servir de soporte a estatuas ecuestres y son de mayor anchura que los dos situados en la zona sur. Tres de ellos albergan estatuas: Jorge IV Henry Havelock, y sir Charles James Napier. El alcalde de Londres Ken Livingstone expresó el controvertido deseo de que los dos generales fueran sustituidos por estatuas que los londinenses de a pie reconocieran.

Frente a la National Gallery se sitúan dos monumentos, la estatua de Jacobo II al oeste de la entrada del pórtico y la de George Washington al este.

Structure

Nelson's Column was planned independently of Barry's work. In 1838 a Nelson Memorial Committee had approached the government proposing that a monument to the victory of Trafalgar, funded by public subscription, should be erected in the square. A competition was held and won by the architect William Railton, who proposed a 218-foot-3-inch Corinthian column topped by a statue of Nelson and guarded by four sculpted lions. The design was approved, but received widespread objections from the public. Construction went ahead beginning in 1840 but with the height reduced to 145 feet 3 inches. The column was completed and the statue raised in November 1843.

La columna de Nelson está situada en el centro de la plaza, rodeada por las fuentes diseñadas por sir Edwin Lutyens en 1939 y por cuatro enormes leones de bronce esculpidos por sir Edwin Landseer. La columna está coronada por una estatua del almirante Nelson. La ciudad de La Plata, en Argentina, posee una columna inspirada en la columna de Nelson en su Plaza Italia, proyectada por el Arq. Vecellio, coronada por un águila de bronce que sostiene las banderas de Argentina e Italia.

History

The site has been significant since the 13th century. During Edward I's reign it hosted the King's Mews, running north from the T-junction in the south, Charing Cross, where the Strand from the City meets Whitehall coming north from Westminster. From the reign of Richard II to that of Henry VII, the mews was at the western end of the Strand. The name "Royal Mews" comes from the practice of keeping hawks here for moulting; "mew" is an old word for this. After a fire in 1534, the mews were rebuilt as stables, and remained here until George IV moved them to Buckingham Palace.

Trafalgar Square es una plaza del centro de Londres, construida para conmemorar la batalla de Trafalgar, en la que la armada británica venció a las armadas francesa y española frente al cabo de Trafalgar, Los Caños de Meca, localidad del municipio de Barbate, Cádiz, España. El nombre original era plaza de Guillermo IV, pero George Ledwell Taylor sugirió cambiar el nombre.

En la zona norte de la plaza se situaron las caballerizas reales desde la época de Eduardo I, mientras que al sur se encontraba la Charing Cross original. Actualmente se considera a Charing Cross como el corazón de Londres y desde ella se miden todas las distancias.
